To stand on our own feet is the only solution of existence.....

However, 14 tribes of aboriginees are the minority in the seciety of Taiwan. Most of the aboriginees are living in the mountain area, the deficiency of social resources make them hard to survive, culture shock and language differences make them hard to get a decent job. But, it's a story about ..... a handicapped pastor who is also a fighter, Bai Guang Sheng with his wife and family returned to his home town of Yanping township to minister together with his people. He had a good understanding of the difficulties of the aboriginal people finding work and believed that there was only one way to approach this challenge – to renew the life of the community.

About the Bunun Tribe

With a population of over 200 million people, the Austronesians are second in number only to the Indo-Europeans. The Austronesian language family is characterized by the fact that it is the only language group that is spoken primarily on islands. These islands are located mostly in Southeast Asia , with Taiwan the farthest northern place where the Austronesian languages are spoken. Through their research, archaeologists and anthropologists have deduced that the Austronesians planned their migration from Taiwan , which is largely thought to be the origin of Austronesian culture. Currently, Taiwan 's government recognizes 14 groups of indigenous people on the island. Each of these tribes has its own unique culture, customs, and village structure. There is a rare and abundant mixture of ethnic groups in Taiwan , but with the impact of modernization and the strong influence of a primarily Han Chinese culture, the language and culture of the island's indigenous peoples is disappearing at an increasing rate. Taiwan 's indigenous people became known to the world through the unique eight-part harmonic singing of the Bunun Tribe. This unique music form caught the attention of Western ethnomusicologists when Japanese scholar Kurozawa Takatomo presented recordings of Bunun music in Paris 1943. Then, in 1952, Kurozawa permanently changed musicologists' ideas about the origins of music when he introduced a traditional Bunun song called “Pasibutbut” (“Prayer for the Millet Harvest”) to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). With its complex harmony, “Pasibutbut” overturned the scholars' original theory that music originated in single-note melodies, progressing to two-note harmonies, and then on to more complex arrangements. The Bunun people live along Taiwan 's Central Mountain Range at altitudes higher than any other indigenous group on the island. Their culture is closely tied to their experiences in the mountains, and they were the last tribe of native people in Taiwan to give up hunting as an integral part of daily life. “ Pasibutbut,” which has been called " The sound of nature ”is said to have been created by a member of the Bunun Tribe who was inspired by the sounds of humming bees, a rushing waterfall, or the sounds made when crossing through a pine or bamboo forest. In the legend which accompanies the song, a pair of lovers is separated by a mountain, with one living on the eastern face, and the other on the western face. In order to meet one another, they would have to cross a wooden plank spanning a deep valley. One day when crossing the plank to meet her lover, the girl slipped, and when the boy reached out to help her, the two fell together into the valley stream far below. It is said that even to this day, whenever the Bunun people cross the stream, they can still hear the sound of someone singing. It is because of this legend that the Bunun people say that their harmonies are learned from the moving waters of the mountain streams. Jin-niang Hu, who is a teacher in the Bunun village of Wulu , said: "Our singing voices are like streams—they make different sounds, high and low, when passing over rocks. Sometimes they separate; sometimes they come together." Singing in harmony is an integral part of daily life for the Bunun people- they use harmonies to express themselves while hunting, weaving, celebrating, and drinking. Hunting, in particular, is often accompanied with song, and many of the songs deal with this topic. This comes as no surprise though, when you consider that traversing the mountains and valleys in pursuit of wild animals is a vital part of Bunun life. The traditions and cultures of Taiwan 's indigenous peoples are gradually disappearing due to the increasing influence of the Han Chinese culture and the affects of modernization. Rice has already largely replaced millet as the main staple food of the aborigines, and hunting practices have largely been curbed by local laws and statutes. Traditional Bunun methods of harmonizing have also slowly disappeared due to the influence of Western singing styles and ways of harmonizing, and the focus on the bel canto style of singing in which beauty of tone is emphasized over power of voice. Today, Wulu Elementary School 's Jin-niang Hu is the only teacher who is still dedicated to teaching children to sing the traditional harmonies of the Bunun people or the Bunun Tribe. Music is part of life, culture and rituals, it is their way of passing along and recording the culture and history of their people. The Bunun village of Wulu is located on the southeastern part of the Central Mountain Range at an altitude of over 700 M above sea level. There are only 60 households in the village and a population of over 300 people. Wulu is not easily reached due to its location, which means that it has been less influenced by the outside world. This also means that traditional Bunun culture has been carefully preserved there. Currently, Wulu is the most unadulterated of all the Bunun villages, and the home to the most traditional styles of Bunun singing.
